Organizers: Joe Glover, Keith Whitfield

Speakers: David Parrott, Vice President of Student Affairs, University of Florida
Matt Seeger, Dean of the School of Communication, Wayne State University

How do we foster a healthy campus climate all of the time and not respond solely during crises? How do we foster conversation with students and faculty whose understanding of “free speech” may not align with the Constitution? How does this fit into the campus structure — classroom, multicultural centers, student conduct codes, “principles of community”?

9:30-9:45 a.m.

Break

9:45 -11:15 a.m.

Session II – Free Speech on Campus (Part 2) How do we explain our obligations to internal and external stakeholders?

Mt Evans

Organizers: Karen Hanson, Dru Marshall

In this session we will use two case studies – one each from an American and a Canadian institution - to explore how obligations related to free speech and freedom of expression play out during a crisis, how they are understood or misunderstood by internal and external stakeholders and the general public, and how these misunderstandings can be exacerbated — sometimes deliberately-- through social media. Lessons learned will be identified. An open discussion and sharing of situations across institutions--—both problems and useful responses-- will then be encouraged.

Groups will identify and write multiple strategies, best practices, or lessons learned. At the end of the session, participants will have the opportunity to walk through a gallery of concise written summaries, and identify the most effective ideas generated by the groups.

Mt Evans

Organizers: Sara Mangelsdorf, Bruce McPheron

Speakers: Jay Akridge, Purdue University

All of us are focused on the dual issues of access to and affordability of higher education in our states and at our institutions. Our final session will focus on this topic, and we'll treat the time as an opportunity to share successes and aspirations. We're asking each participant to come with at least one example of an access and/or affordability initiative that your institution, system, or state has implemented. The sharing of ideas will provide us with a collective inventory of thinking about these challenges and allow each of us to identify personal contacts with peers who are tackling these issues.
